

Identify :

1. Supreme Court Term Limits

The proposed amendment seeks to impose term limits of 18 years for Supreme Court justices. The amendment has been endorsed by bipartisan lawmakers such as Senators Joe Manchin and Peter Welch, who think that term limits would reduce the politicization of the Court and help it keep up with changing society. The critics are of the opinion that life tenure is essential for judicial independence and that imposing term limits would disrupt the continuity of the Court.

2. Reversing the Same-Sex Marriage Decision

The objective of the suggested solution is to nullify the Supreme Court 2015 decision legalizing same-sex marriage across the country. The proponents of the amendment, mainly right-wing lawmakers, argue that the amendment would be in support of state autonomy and of traditional society. Civil liberties organizations and sexual minority advocacy groups are the opposing ones who truly believe that nullifying the ruling would infringe on equal protection under the law and destabilize stability in the administration of justice.

Explain ::

1. Because the amending process of the Constitution demands high consensus from Congress and the states, attempts at amending it do not succeed for the most part. Only amendments of wide and enduring consensus are approved, thanks to the high approval requirement. Furthermore, the level of consensus demanded is difficult to obtain in the face of bitter political differences.
2. The framers intentionally made amending the Constitution hard in an attempt to avoid frequent or hasty changes. Only major and broadly accepted changes are made, as ensured by the three-fourths of the states and two-thirds of Congress approval requirement.
3. As it maintains the integrity and stability of the Constitution, the process of amendment must not be altered. Constitutional amendments have the potential to cause changes on the basis of transitory political forces at the cost of the document's long-term legitimacy.
